Vaccination has been described as a deliberate attempt to protect humans against disease. During 20th century the practice of vaccination matured into routine vaccination of large population as a precautionary measure for a disease. During the past 200 years, since the time of Edward Jenner and his contribution in Small Pox vaccination procedure has controlled many epidemics with infectious diseases including current pandemic COVID-19 in many parts of the world. The importance of vaccines cannot be overstated as millions of people are alive today due to vaccines.

Equitable access to safe and effective vaccines is critical to end the COVID-19 pandemic.
