Report on Basil Plant Distribution Program

The National Service Scheme (NSS) Department organized a Basil Plant Distribution Program on 14 August 2025 at 11.00am with the objective of promoting environmental awareness and encouraging the community to adopt eco-friendly practices. The program aimed to highlight the importance of medicinal plants and inspire people to contribute to environmental conservation by planting and nurturing basil (Tulsi) plants at their homes.

The activity was coordinated by Mr. Ankit Pusadkar and Mr. Purvesh Fating, NSS Programme Officer, along with Mr. Ankit Banpurkar, Assistant Professor, Department of English. A total of 15 NSS volunteers actively participated in organizing and conducting the program.

During the event, basil plant saplings were distributed among members of the local community. The volunteers also interacted with residents and explained the environmental and medicinal significance of the basil plant. They emphasized how planting basil helps improve air quality, supports biodiversity, and promotes a healthy lifestyle due to its well-known medicinal properties.

The NSS volunteers played a vital role in arranging the saplings, coordinating with the community members, and spreading awareness about environmental protection. Their enthusiastic participation ensured the smooth and successful execution of the program.

The program received a positive response from the community, with many residents appreciating the initiative and expressing their willingness to plant and care for the basil saplings. The event served as an effective step toward promoting environmental responsibility and strengthening the connection between the institution and the community.

Overall, the Basil Plant Distribution Program proved to be a meaningful initiative that encouraged sustainable practices and environmental consciousness among the local people. The NSS Department remains committed to organizing such activities in the future to promote ecological balance and community welfare.
